Right — Bicycles of the past, present and future out for a hike. The high wheeler of thirty years ago, the modern bike of today and on the left the novel cycle predicted for the future—solid tires again, short wheelbase, high gear, and a unique frame and handlebar arrangement. Notice how the wheels become smaller with each improved type.

Some check! Nearly eleven million dollars! New York City's share of the state income tax receipts handed over to Comptroller Charles L. Craig the other day. How would you like to cash it?

Left—Not the latest addition to the Bronx Zoo, but a lowly potato that sold for $140 in a raffle to buy smokes for the soldiers. The freak spud was dug from the ground out in Washington just as shown, with the exception that the legs were added by the ship-builder who unearthed it.

Human yachting is the latest! This Salt Lake City mermaid is the originator of the novel stunt. A sail, a bamboo mast, some spars, belt, rope and a one-piece bathing suit is all you need. Just slide overboard, float on your back and using your feet as a rudder, let the gentle summer zephyrs carry you where you will. If you've a six-foot keel the chances are you could imitate a schooner and carry two masts.

The bigger the job the better a farm tractor likes it. Here's one of the gas mules on the job out in Peoria, Ill., acting as an emergency switch engine in a successful effort to help relieve the congested freight yards. It pulled loaded freight cars around in splendid style, and at a rate that was surprising.

An interesting photograph of America's probable cup defender, Resolute, sailing before the wind with all sails set. A new steel mast has taken the place of the ill-fated wooden one which snapped in a recent trial race with the Vanitie off New Haven.
